Transforming Managers Into Leaders: Seven Sensible Constructive Strategies

What is leadership? Who has this magical quality? How do they get it? Are leaders born, or made? This session is designed to help managers or senior staff better understand the nature of leadership so they can teach/coach the key leadership principles that transform managers into leaders.

Whose responsibility is it to get this done . . . the aspiring manager or the leader who needs help? Leaders initiate it, but the manager who wants to become a leader must select himself or herself and take charge of the project on the leader's behalf.

Verbal skill combined with vision, forward thinking, and strategy are the primary tools of leaders. Managing is making and exceeding goals and helping people at lower levels achieve or exceed their individual potential. The transformation to leadership, working outside the box of management, is one of the most difficult but exciting tasks those managers who choose to be leaders can undertake.

In this program, Jim Lukaszewski unlocks, explores, and illustrates crucial communication themes and ingredients of leadership, and the steps in the process of helping managers of helping managers transform themselves into leaders. Participants also go through an interesting personal leadership potential self-analysis.

Program Topics

- Learn the key ingredients that leaders need to lead.
